MediaWell

News Item

Job Opportunity: Faculty Fellows – Race, Technology, and the State | Data & Society Research Institute

By Data & Society Research Institute
December 8, 2021

> Call for 2022-23 Faculty Fellows: Race, Technology, and the State
>
> Deadline for applications: December 15, 2021
>
> Data & Society is assembling its eighth class of fellows to join us for 10 months, starting September 1, 2022. Our fellows program helps ensure that new connections and perspectives deepen and expand our community's understanding of the challenges and opportunities society faces in a data-centric world. (Please meet our current and past fellows classes here.)
>
> Data & Society fellows have pursued academic research, written code, created art, brought together communities of activists and practice, run workshops and hosted convenings, worked closely with Data & Society's in-house research team across research initiatives and each other, and much more.
>
> Fellows are researchers concerned with the implications of data-centric technology's role in reconfiguring society. We are engaged, individually and together, in interrogating and articulating those implications and developing frames that can help society address emergent tensions. As we build the 2022-2023 class, we're continuing to embrace breadth and diversity in our selection process.
>
> […]

Source: Job Application for Faculty Fellows: Race, Technology, and the State (2022-2023) at Data & Society Research Institute