This story is part of a Recode series about Big Tech and antitrust. Over the next few weeks, we'll cover what's happening with Apple, Amazon, Microsoft, Meta, and Google.

It wasn't immediately clear what Mark Zuckerberg wanted to do with Oculus when Facebook bought the virtual reality headset maker back in 2014. Those plans are now coming into focus: Facebook is now called Meta, and it's not just a social media company, it's a metaverse company. And as the new name implies, Meta wants to win in this space, just as Facebook won in social media.

But a growing group of regulators, politicians, and advocacy groups are raising concerns about Meta's plans in this realm.
