

Coronavirus Doctors Battle Another Scourge: Misinformation | The New York Times

By Adam Satariano

August 18, 2020

An emergency room doctor in Illinois was accused in April of profiting from naming coronavirus as the cause of a patient's death, a rumor spreading online.

An internist in New York treated a vomiting patient in May who drank a bleach mixture as part of a fake virus cure found on YouTube.

And in June a paramedic in Britain aided a clearly sick man who had refused to go to a hospital after reading misleading warnings about poor coronavirus treatment on social media.

Doctors on the front lines of the global pandemic say they are fighting not just the coronavirus, but also increasingly combating a never-ending scourge of misinformation about the disease that is hurting patients.

[...]

Source: Coronavirus Doctors Battle Another Scourge: Misinformation - The New York Times