

Daily Telegraph Gives Chinese Coronavirus Propaganda Direct Line To The UK | BuzzFeed News

By Dean Sterling Jones

April 3, 2020

When medical authorities in China claimed they'd cured more than 750 cases of COVID-19, the disease caused by the coronavirus, using pseudoscience, one major British newspaper made sure there was space for China's party line on the story.

"Traditional Chinese medicine 'helps fight coronavirus,'" declared the March 3 headline, in the online version of the Daily Telegraph. Without any evidence, the article claimed that the National Administration of Traditional Chinese Medicine had tested an unidentified "prescription" on 804 patients, and that "by the end of 14 February," it had proven "effective in 94 per cent of the cases."

[...]

Source: Daily Telegraph Gives Chinese Coronavirus Propaganda Direct Line To The UK | BuzzFeed News