

Facebook says it's getting better at weeding out child sex abuse images | MIT Technology Review

By Charlotte Jee

November 14, 2019

The news: Facebook has revealed a huge jump in images of child sex abuse uploaded to the website: 11.6 million pieces of content from July to September this year, versus 6.9 million from April to June. However, it proactively detects and removes over 99% of all such images, and the large increase is due to better detection, it said in its latest transparency report.

[...]

Source: Facebook says it's getting better at weeding out child sex abuse images - MIT Technology Review