

Facebook's fact-checking deal with the Daily Caller, explained | Vox

By Aaron Rupar

May 6, 2019

Facebook knows that the spread of fake news on the platform during the 2016 presidential campaign was almost its undoing, so it has chosen to partner with third-party media organizations to fact-check publishers on its platform in order to stave off more criticism. That makes sense. But some of its choices in partners — including a new fact-checker funded by a right-leaning news outlet founded by Tucker Carlson — has only invited more.

[...]

Source: Facebook's fact-checking deal with the Daily Caller, explained | Vox