

Webinar: Is Social Media Undermining Democracy? | Columbia Global Centers

By Global Columbia Collaboratory

December 16, 2020

The scandal of political consulting firm Cambridge Analytica's dubious manipulation of Facebook accounts and data to influence several elections worldwide is well reported and widely known. More recently, documentaries have chronicled how social media feeds tend to reinforce a user's own views, often distorting ideas about the world, ourselves, and each other - at the expense of objective truth. And most recently, the US presidential elections have provided a stark account of a very divided and polarized society, with many entrenched voters and politicians refusing to compromise in their views.
