

Nearly a third of all Republicans say they 'definitely won't' get vaccinated, citing Trump's Covid falsities | Independent

By Chris Riotta

March 11, 2021

Nearly one-third of all Republicans are opposed to receiving coronavirus vaccinations, according to a growing number of polls, as reports indicate many Americans rejecting the jab have cited former President Donald Trump's misinformation about Covid-19.

Those who have said they were "definitely not" planning on getting a coronavirus vaccine suggested the global pandemic had been overblown by the media and the Democratic Party in interviews with the Washington Post for a report published on Monday.

The comments largely reflected the former president's misleading statements and outright falsities about the novel virus as it swept through the United States last year, at a time when Mr Trump was claiming the virus would disappear and was not a threat to the nation. More than 500,000 Americans have since died as a result of the pandemic.

[...]

Source: Nearly a third of all Republicans say they 'definitely won't' get vaccinated, citing Trump's Covid falsities