

New Details Hint at Risk of Russian Misinformation in Dossier | The New York Times

By Charlie Savage and Adam Goldman

April 16, 2020

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration has declassified several footnotes from a report about the F.B.I.'s Trump-Russia investigation, providing details hinting anew at the possibility that Russia may have sown disinformation in a dossier used to investigate a former Trump campaign aide.

The newly disclosed information consists of previously blacked-out words in more than three dozen footnotes from a lengthy report on the investigation by the Justice Department's independent inspector general, Michael E. Horowitz, that was made public in December. Several were disclosed Friday and the rest were sent to lawmakers on Tuesday.

[...]

Source: New Details Hint at Risk of Russian Misinformation in Dossier | The New York Times