

Pennsylvania postal worker backed off ballot tampering claims | The Washington Post

By Shawn Boburg, Jacob Bogage, and Dalton Bennett

November 12, 2020

In an interview this week with federal agents, a Pennsylvania postal worker walked back his allegation that a supervisor had tampered with mailed ballots, saying he had made “assumptions” based on overheard snippets of conversation, according to an audio recording of the interview posted online Wednesday by activists who have championed his cause.

The two-hour recording shows that Richard Hopkins recanted claims he had made in a sworn affidavit that top Republicans cited over the weekend as potential evidence of widespread election irregularities and fraud.

[...]

Source: Pennsylvania postal worker backed off ballot tampering claims | The Washington Post