

The challenges for fact-checkers working across different countries include time zones and translations | Poynter

By Cristina Tardáguila

November 7, 2019

Fact-checking across borders, in different time zones and in disparate languages at the same time is a daily routine for a handful of fact-checking organizations. On the last day of Facebook's global Fact-Checking Partner Summit, some of those fact-checkers took the stage in Menlo Park, California, and shared with an audience of more than 100 fact-checkers three of the biggest challenges they face: hiring people, working in different time zones and translating their verifications.

[...]

Source: The challenges for fact-checkers working across different countries include time zones and translations