

The Technology 202: Facebook says current privacy laws are ‘insufficient’ | The Washington Post

By Cat Zakrzewski

July 17, 2020

The social network today released its latest white paper, a 29-page document calling current privacy practices and laws “insufficient.” The company says the paper is intended to spark greater debate about how the tech industry can inform people about its use of their data — and move beyond convoluted privacy policies or notifications about cookies that pop up so frequently they make people’s eyes glaze over.

[...]

Source: The Technology 202: Facebook says current privacy laws are ‘insufficient’ - The Washington Post