

The US doctors taking Trump's lead on hydroxychloroquine – despite mixed results | The Guardian

By Jessica Glenza

May 26, 2020

There is an alternate universe of Covid-19 misinformation masquerading as science, which with the encouragement of Donald Trump, is proliferating among his supporters.

Among the most ardent proponents of these claims is the American Association of Physicians and Surgeons (AAPS), a fringe group of less than 5,000 doctors. The group was recently cited by Trump's campaign manager, Brad Parscale, to explain the president's stunning announcement that he is taking the drug hydroxychloroquine in an attempt to protect himself against Covid-19 despite a lack of evidence of its effectiveness.

[...]

Source: The US doctors taking Trump's lead on hydroxychloroquine – despite mixed results | The Guardian