

Time for Transparency From Digital Platforms, But What Does That Really Mean? | Lawfare

By Heidi Tworek and Alicia Wanless

January 21, 2022

U.S. lawmakers rarely agree these days. But across the political spectrum, most policymakers concur that digital platforms, including social media, messengers, and search engines, pose a problem. They might not agree on what the problem is exactly—either a scourge of unfettered disinformation or a censorship of conservative views—but one approach for answering that question is gaining popularity: transparency reporting by digital platforms.

[...]

Source: Time for Transparency From Digital Platforms, But What Does That Really Mean? | Lawfare