

Twitter And Snapchat Are Reining Trump In. Critics Want Them To Do It Around The World.

By Pranav Dixit and Megha Rajagopalan

June 5, 2020

Bowing to criticism that predates his presidency, Twitter and Snap have begun to limit how President Donald Trump uses their platforms — fact-checking him, adding warning labels to his posts, or reducing his reach. But as the platforms enact new rules for Trump, politicians around the world continue to elude moderation, leaving misinformation and violence in their wake.

Members of India's ruling Bharatiya Janata Party, for instance, have spread misinformation and anti-Muslim prejudice for years; and in 2018, Iran's leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei incited violence against Israel, calling it a "malignant cancerous tumor" that must be "removed and eradicated."

[...]

Source: Twitter And Snapchat Are Reining Trump In. Critics Want Them To Do It Around The World. | BuzzFeed News