

Twitter Expands QAnon Restrictions To Include Candidates, Elected Officials | Forbes

By Jack Brewster

September 18, 2020

Twitter said Thursday it will extend its restrictions on QAnon-linked accounts and content to political candidates and elected officials who promote the conspiracy theory, a pivot in the company's stance from August when it told Forbes it was "evaluating" an "expansion" of the new policy.

Key Facts: In July, Twitter cracked down on the conspiracy theory, banning more than 7,000 accounts and preventing QAnon content from appearing on sections of its site — but its enforcement policy was murky when it came to elected officials and candidates.

[...]

Source: Twitter Expands QAnon Restrictions To Include Candidates, Elected Officials