

Twitter Plays Whac-a-Mole with Alex Jones, Suspends 18 Linked Accounts | Ars Technica

By Valentina Palladino

October 24, 2018

Conspiracy theorist Alex Jones and his company InfoWars may have had their accounts yanked from Twitter, but that has not erased their presence from the platform. According to a CNN report, Twitter took action on Monday and suspended 18 additional accounts associated with Jones and InfoWars. The decision came after the Daily Beast reported last week that numerous accounts were still sharing InfoWars' content. All of the newly suspended accounts were "under the InfoWars umbrella," according to a statement from a Twitter spokesperson provided to CNET. Some of those suspended include the InfoWars Store account and the InfoWars "Real News" with David Knight show account.

[...]

Source: Twitter plays whac-a-mole with Alex Jones, suspends 18 linked accounts | Ars Technica