

Twitter's plan to charge researchers for data access puts it in EU crosshairs | POLITICO

By Mark Scott

March 30, 2023

Elon Musk pledged Twitter would abide by Europe's new content rules — but Yevgeniy Golovchenko is not so convinced.

The Ukrainian academic, an assistant professor at the University of Copenhagen, relies on the social network's data to track Russian disinformation, including propaganda linked to the ongoing war in Ukraine. But that access, including to reams of tweets analyzing pro-Kremlin messaging, may soon be cut off. Or, even worse for Golovchenko, cost him potentially millions of euros a year.

[...]

Source: Twitter's plan to charge researchers for data access puts it in EU crosshairs - POLITICO