

Vaccinating Africa against COVID-19: riding a roller coaster of poor information | The Conversation

By Heidi Larson and Raji Tajudeen

May 6, 2021

The story of COVID-19 vaccines and vaccination in Africa is slowly unfolding, as more and more countries across the continent receive shipments of the long-awaited vaccines.

These early shipments won't be enough for all. Some countries have used up the limited supply they have received, while others are still waiting. But some have them, and don't want them. This is a key challenge that vaccination drives face: vaccine reluctance.

Each country in Africa has its own mix of settings, histories and politics. This produces varied levels of trust and views on how serious COVID-19 really is. Some have questioned whether it even exists, or was fabricated by a foreign actor.

[...]

Source: Vaccinating Africa against COVID-19: riding a roller coaster of poor information