News Item

Visiting Assistant Professor – Disinformation | Clemson University

By Clemson University

May 29, 2020

> The Clemson University Disinformation Lab seeks a visiting research professor. This visitor will work on independent research related to the production, dissemination, and impact of disinformation and/or misinformation, with support and collaboration from senior faculty members and students. They will participate in the academic life of the college (including attending workshops and seminars), work with students who share interests in these topics, and present their work internally and externally. This appointment includes no required teaching. Candidates should have a record of research achievement that demonstrates an interest and aptitude in making significant contributions to the study of disinformation. Candidates are expected to have completed their PhD in political science, economics, communication, computational social science, or a related field by the appointment start date, which is flexible throughout the summer of 2020.
>
> […]

Source: Visiting Assistant Professor – Disinformation | Clemson University