

What should Twitter do next to slow the spread of misinformation? | Poynter

By Katy Byron

May 29, 2020

As a longtime journalist and former newsroom leader at a tech platform now teaching media literacy to millions, this Twitter-Trump battle over “fact-checking” has all my worlds colliding.

And break out the popcorn ‘cause it’s about to get really interesting ...

The Washington Post reports that President Donald Trump will probably sign an executive order, possibly today, that could be a major hit to tech giants Google, Facebook and Twitter. Trump seems mad because Twitter slapped a link on two of his tweets regarding mail-in ballots and voter fraud in an attempt to “fact-check” what he was saying.

[...]

Source: What should Twitter do next to slow the spread of misinformation? | Poynter