

Why a YouTube Chat About Chess Got Flagged for Hate Speech | WIRED

By Will Knight

March 2, 2021

Last June, Antonio Radić, the host of a YouTube chess channel with more than a million subscribers, was live-streaming an interview with the grandmaster Hikaru Nakamura when the broadcast suddenly cut out.

Instead of a lively discussion about chess openings, famous games, and iconic players, viewers were told Radić's video had been removed for "harmful and dangerous" content. Radić saw a message stating that the video, which included nothing more scandalous than a discussion of the King's Indian Defense, had violated YouTube's community guidelines. It remained offline for 24 hours.

[...]

Source: Why a YouTube Chat About Chess Got Flagged for Hate Speech | WIRED