

Why you can trust the Iowa caucus results once they're released | Vox

By German Lopez

February 4, 2020

We still don't know who won the Democratic Iowa caucuses, largely due to technical issues with an app that precincts were supposed to use to report their results. The official results are now supposed to come out sometime Tuesday.

In the meantime, the delay — and concerns about the technical issues — has already begun to erode trust in the results on social media. Some people are even posting full-blown conspiracy theories, typically claiming, with no evidence whatsoever, that the Iowa Democratic Party is altering the results because they show Sen. Bernie Sanders, a candidate disfavored by the establishment, to be the night's winner.

[...]

Source: The 2020 Iowa caucus results can be trusted, despite technical issues - Vox