

Will Newspapers Disappear in the Future? | The Washington Post

By Douglas McLennan and Jack Miles

March 22, 2018

Newspapers have been dying in slow motion for two decades now. In Canada, this talk has transcended the hypothetical; the government commissioned a report that speculates on what Canada's democracy might look like in a post-newspaper world. In Britain, too, Prime Minister Theresa May has warned that the closure of newspaper after newspaper is a "danger to democracy;" Britain has nearly 200 fewer regional and local newspapers now than in 2005. The picture is similar in the U.S. A once unimaginable scenario has lately become grimly conceivable.

Source: Will newspapers disappear in the future? | The Washington Post