

YouTube posts additions to its rules on political and election-related misinformation | Axios

By Margaret Harding McGill, Sara Fischer

February 4, 2020

YouTube will bar videos that lie about the mechanics of an election, the company announced in a blog post Monday, but indicated it remains reluctant to crack down more broadly on deceptive political speech, as some critics have demanded.

Why it matters: YouTube's content policies — which are separate from the advertising policies Google outlined in the fall — do not ban political falsehoods at a time when tech platforms are under fire to limit misinformation about candidates and elections.

[...]

Source: YouTube posts additions to its rules on political and election-related misinformation | Axios